

KYLE KANE

Founder of onSpark, #14 Fastest Growing AI Company in America (Inc. 5000, 2026)

Kyle Kane is the Emmy-winning founder and CEO of onSpark, the AI-powered operating system for the partnership economy, which debuted at No. 180 on the 2026 Inc. 5000 and No. 14 in AI and Data and was named to TechCrunch's Startup Battlefield 200. Signed to Universal as a songwriter at 17, he spent 18 years brokering partnerships for Katy Perry and Samsung, Rihanna and Vita Coco, and Kylie Jenner and Daniel Wellington, driving more than $2 billion in partner revenue. After his best friend lost his business, and then his life, Kyle set out to put the Fortune 500 playbook in the hands of founders who could never afford it. He keynoted CES with Amazon, has given two TEDx talks, and is finishing Borrowed Gravity (Aevitas Creative Management), the book that tells founders to stop networking, kill the pitch, and borrow trust. He is also leading The Grounds, a privately funded $120 million, 50,000-capacity festival campus planned for Jacksonville.

INTERVIEW TOPICS & TITLES

TITLE: NETWORKING IS NOISE. STOP NETWORKING.

A drawer of business cards produced nothing. One conversation at a Las Vegas bar put Samsung inside Katy Perry's "Birthday."

Why the networking economy gets paid on attendance, how collectors become architects, and how to activate the network you already have.

TITLE: KILL YOUR PITCH

Everybody wants to buy something. Nobody wants to be sold.

Why the most rehearsed ritual in business fails as physics, and the study, name, shape, invite conversation that replaces it.

TITLE: NO ONE WANTS TO BUY FROM STRANGERS

When AI writes every cold email, the only attention worth having comes with trust attached, and trust can be borrowed.

Borrowed Gravity, the O.P.A. framework for choosing to buy, build, or borrow attention, and why rented channels keep flooding.

TITLE: HELD AT GUNPOINT BY THE PEOPLE WHO CALLED THEMSELVES MY PARTNERS

The man who got Kyle out of that room never used the word partner, and he was the only partner in the story.

Vendors, brand deals, and sponsors versus true partnerships, verifying the humans as well as the numbers, and why only shared stakes survive bad weather.

SUGGESTED QUESTIONS

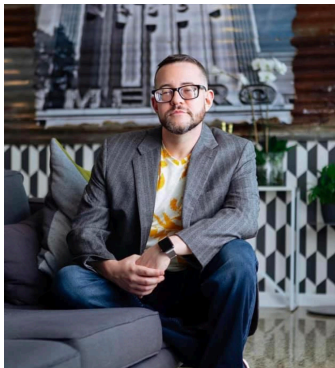

- What did growing up in the music industry teach you about the value of partnerships?
- What is it like building a $120 million venue from scratch?
- Why does Jacksonville need a 50,000–capacity festival campus, and why build it with private money?
- You say networking is noise. You threw away a drawer of business cards and kept one conversation from a Las Vegas bar. What happened next?
- You tell founders to kill their pitch. What do they say instead when they finally get the meeting?
- No one wants to buy from strangers. How does a founder with no audience borrow trust?
- You were signed to Universal as a songwriter at 17. What did the record business teach you about leverage?
- What did Katy Perry x Samsung, Kylie Jenner x Daniel Wellington, and Rihanna x Vita Coco have in common?
- A canceled Drake show cost you millions and 26,000 refunds. What did that night teach you about choosing partners?
- You've been held at gunpoint by people who called themselves your partners. What separates a partner from everyone else?
- What is the difference between a sponsorship and a partnership, and why do most brands confuse them?
- You turned down real money and called it the best decision of your early career. Why is saying no the strategy?
- Your best friend lost his business, and then his life. How did that change what you build and who you build it for?
- Your TEDx talk was about mental health and entrepreneurial resilience. Why is founder isolation a business problem?
- You're a non-technical founder running a company on 72 AI agents. What should founders automate first, and what never?
- What happens to business development when an AI agent can find the partner, get the intro, and close the deal?
